[?] MACROs are stand-alone code you can insert into a memo field that can be executed when a record is activated. If you want to know more about MACROs, read the Help file. [?] Macros can only be used in Memo fields. In tables, you can only use field list macros. [?] Macros cannot use the data or attributes of fields. [?] Macros are useful when the text format of the memo field contains too much code. In this case, we recommend using a programmable form instead. [?] The only supported type of MACRO is COMMAND. [?] While MACROs are useful for situations where formatting in the memo field itself is involved, they are of limited use for data-entry forms.

EXAMPLE: This is a very long and complicated test message: PROCEDURE C.RTRANGE(startparm,endparm); END; MACRO RANGE(startparm,endparm); BEGIN MACRO C.DATE(dateparm); END; BEGIN PROMPT 'MACRO' MACRO C.DELETE(recordparm); END; BEGIN

C.RTRANGE(startparm,endparm); END; END. { You know that when you reach the end of the day. Do you know when you can reach the end of the day? } That's it, we promise you. What makes Alventis so unique, above all others on the market, is its way of handling all kinds of data, in any number of formats. This includes structured as well as unstructured data, text, audio, and video as well as combinations thereof. Alventis is part of the box, not part of the sale, but your 30-day trial is already running out. Alventis has been around for some years, yet it has never gained acceptance as a sort-of text-processing application. For that reason, though it has become known as "a relational database application", it has never properly been described as an "object-oriented" database. Alventis includes a bunch of "libraries" in the sense of object-oriented applications. That is, they are sort-of pre-structured, full-text indexed, and fast. There are many tables and forms 81e310abfb
